

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I wish to thank my whole family, my daughters, Ilana and Tamar, and granddaughters, Diane and Myra, who encouraged me for years to write my story, and also helped me get in touch with some vital people from my past. It was their curiosity about my life and our family history that inspired me to write my autobiography. My brothers, Ernest and Raymond, and my son, David, also gave me constructive criticism and advice, and made important suggestions.

I wish to thank Lee Barnathan, the first to edit my manuscript; Jeanette Shelburne, a professional writer, teacher and featured speaker, and her class, who initially gave me needed direction and offered invaluable constructive criticism; and Monise Neumann, who made important comments and suggestions for the March of the Living chapter.

My deepest gratitude goes to Martina Gruber, who became my main editor. We met regularly to restructure and reorganize the manuscript, turning individual stories into a real book. Her research was invaluable in setting the war chapters into the historical events of the times. Martina brought passion and significant attention to detail to enhance character development.

I am extremely grateful to Jennifer Croslow (Jen), who served as my second editor, and whose support has been essential in bringing this manuscript to conclusion. Jen brought skill, enthusiasm, and sensitivity to deepen the insights. She focused primarily on the reader's perspective, and was important in turning my life into a meaningful story.

Also, a word of thanks to Ed Addeo and several friends who reviewed the whole manuscript for grammar and punctuation, and to Jose Ramirez of Pedernales Publishing for transforming the manuscript into this book.

Lastly, my deepest gratitude goes again to my eldest daughter, Ilana Meskin, for her extensive project management, technical assistance, and brainstorming partnership. Without her limitless support, I have no idea how I could possibly have completed this journey to publication.
